Fifty year-old patient with a left stag-horn stone. Percutaneous nephrolithotomy was performed and the patient began with flank pain and tumefaction.

CT scan showed the presence of important contrast extravasation to subcutaneous tissues through the percutaneous approach. Symptoms improved with conservative behavior.

FIGURE 1. CT image with contrast extravasation.

CORRESPONDENCE

Pablo Garrido
Servicio de Urología
Hospital del Henares
Avda. Marie Curie s/n
28826 Coslada Madrid (España)
pgabad@hotmail.com

Accepted for publication: October 13th, 2010
FIGURE 2. 3D CT.

FIGURE 3. CT image with inflammatory left flank.